

REAL ESTATE TRIVIA

Haunted House

In New York, a buyer sued a seller and was able to get their money back on a home purchase after it was determined that the seller had known that the house was “haunted” and had not disclosed it before the sale. The seller had actually been writing about the supposed “hauntings” for years in the local newspaper. Interestingly, the house was located in the neighborhood “The Legend Of Sleepy Hollow” was written about.

Everyone's Favorite Bank Robber

Charles “Pretty Boy” Floyd was a great depression era bank robber who was viewed positively by the general public. During his bank robberies, he would destroy mortgage documents, which freed the locals of their debts. The citizens of Oklahoma referred to him as “Robin Hood of the Cookson Hills”.

Take A Chance Card

The popular real estate game, Monopoly, was originally designed in 1902 to teach players the broken nature of capitalism. It was first called “The Landlord’s Game”. Ironically, in the 1930’s, the original inventor sold the patent to Parker Bros Games for only $500, who in turn sold 2 million copies over the next couple years and the game became a huge hit and a staple in pop culture.
